All those who were involved in the production of the memorial service for Brad Truax deserve the highest of praise for the excellent job that they did. The event was carried off with great dignity and class, befitting the man whose life we had gathered to celebrate.

The San Diego Men's Chorus was magnificent, as usual, and moved us all very deeply. The sense of love and solidarity among the hundreds who attended was pervasive. I haven't had such a feeling of community and pride since the National March on Washington for Lesbian & Gay Rights. I came away uplifted.

In death, as in life, Brad has brought us all a little closer together. The closeness feels good. Let us each make a personal commitment to remember the feeling and stay close.

Love in the struggle,

Jess Jessop
